UN: Yesterday's Security Council meeting on the Lebanese complaint made no progress, and off-the-floor negotiations indicate that it will be very difficult to obtain a balanced resolution.

Britain's efforts to launch a joint resolution with France failed and both states moved to work from the existing Lebanese draft. That draft specifically condemns "Israel's violation of Lebanese territorial integrity and sovereignty" and makes no reference to Arab acts of violence. A British Foreign Office representative said yesterday that the UK delegation would attempt to amend the Lebanese draft, but predicted that there was no chance of attaining balanced language condemning both sides. If these attempts fail, the British are willing to vote for the draft in its present form.

Also conferring yesterday with US officials, Lebanese Ambassador Kabbani offered little encouragement for attempts to alter his country's draft. Efforts in past Council meetings to amend Arab resolutions have never succeeded. Egypt, furthermore, is reportedly urging Lebanon to present a strong resolution on the grounds that a US veto is inevitable.

The Council will meet again this morning, and the debate will probably continue for several more days.
